And now for the fine print:

Every effort has been made to make the information on maps and the directions as accurate as possible. Nevertheless, it is the participants' responsibility to arm themselves with whatever navigational aids they deem necessary to avoid becoming lost.

JONAT suggests that at a minimum, participants equip themselves with state/provincial highway maps for all the areas they plan to traverse. City maps of metropolitan areas would be well advised. Cell phones and the number of the Sector Coordinator would be invaluable in case of breakdown or directional confusion, although cell service may not exist in rural areas. A GPS navigational system would be an excellent option.

The participant acknowledges that JONAT is a self-guided tour that can be driven at the participant's pace. Participation is at the participant's own risk, so participants must ensure they have up-to-date Tour information and appropriate insurance coverage. It is up to the participants to ensure they have the most up-to-date information.

The tour is organized by volunteers who should not be expected to bear any legal responsibility for their efforts on your behalf. By participating in the Tour, you acknowledge that no Sector Coordinator or other JONAT official will be liable to you for any loss whatsoever arising out of your participation, and any liability of JONAT to you is limited to the amount paid by you for registration. If these conditions are unacceptable to you please tell us immediately so that your registration fee can be returned to you.
