The Journal continues to run on schedule, or early, and Peter, Greg, and Diane continue in their respective roles, and Graphcom continues to handle layout, printing, and shipping.

Costs have risen over the past year two years because of paper supply problems that arose during COVID. The most recent projections that I have read expect that the paper supply and demand will begin to ease by the second quarter of 2023. As paper prices eases, we should see costs come down although it is still unclear where paper costs will settle and whether JCNA should consider a small dues increase to offset increased Jaguar Journal production costs, postal costs, and layout and creative costs.

Our established advertisers continue their support, and I encourage our clubs and members to be mindful and appreciative of the ongoing commitment of these long-standing friends and supporters of our interest.
