YAGUARA YES

President's Article by Janet Martin—Nov-Dec 2019

Jaguar (Panthera onca)

You drive one but have you ever seen our namesake in person? It is a sight to behold. They are absolutely spectacular creatures. These big powerful beauties can actually be found locally at the Animal World & Snake Farm (I was just there and took these pictures) on I-35 north of San Antonio and at the San Antonio Zoo. Yes, they are both Jaguars. Jaguars are the only Panthera Species native to the Americas – Central and South America, parts of Mexico and can be seen in the southwestern US but sighting are rare. Most Jaguars have orange-brown fur with black rosettes and spots (leopards do not have the spots). Some Jaguars have black-on-black coloration. This black or melanistic coloring does not make them a black panther. The term panther is a general term that comes from the scientific name for big cats “Panthera”. Here kitty, kitty!

FEATURED STORY

LISTER
LISTER SUV-E CONCEPT
Designed and Restored by July Taylor 2019

Electric Electrifying: Lister Announces The SUV-E, A More Powerful Take on the I-Pace.

Lister has a long history of taking Jaguar cars and making them faster and meaner. Jaguar's first electric SUV, the I-Pace, gets to join the ranks of the F-Type and F-Pace as the most recent reworked Jaguar from Lister.

Lister does not give much information into what mechanical tweaks they have made, which is interesting to note as this is their first foray into electric powered vehicles. They do share the SUV-E has improved horsepower and torque thanks to update/modification to the car's operating software. Lister does not note any changes to the battery, so the range may be less than that of the original I-Pace. Further modifications see the front bumper, hood, rear bumper, spoiler, fender flares and grille surround being replaced with carbon fiber parts, dropping the weight around 221 pounds. The interior gets a leather overhaul and builders can pick between 60 colors of hides and 200 stitching options. The car also gets titanium wheels, carbon-ceramic brake rotors and an adjustable suspension. The upgraded electric cat is expected to go around $161,000 with a limited number being built.
